COUNCILMAN ATTACKS PARK COMMISSIONERS

Councilman Kitzmiller Gives as his Opinion that Gettysburg National Park Commission Acts without Knowledge of War Department at Washington. Uniform Cart Throughout Town.

That the Gettysburg National Park Commission is buying land in Gettysburg without the knowledge of the authorities at the War Department was given out by Councilman Jacob Kitzmiller at Tuesday night's borough council meeting as his opinion of the operations of the men in charge of the battlefield and its interests.

The discussion came about through some one saying that the Park Commissioners were trying to purchase more land at the east end of town. Mr. Kitzmiller said: "I don't believe the government knows anything about wanting that land. I would like to know what their motive is in buying such a tract. What do they want land in town for anyway?" The second word representative then went on "What do most I don't want to see the Government make any roads in Gettysburg if they expect to control them."

This was followed by a more or less general discussion of the recent work of the Commission.

UNIFORM CURB

The most important business transacted at Tuesday night's meeting of Council was the acceptance of the report of a committee consisting of Messrs. Rice, Klinefelter and Kitzmiller appointed at an estimates be adopted for the uniform curbing across curb all over the borough, to be constructed by the lowest and best bid for by each individual property holder.

The committee recommended that concrete curb and gutter lines be put in by the borough, that a careful account be kept of the expense of the same and that each property owner be required to pay the amount of the cost of the construction of the curb at their pavements. No concrete is to be used. It is estimated that the cost will be about 30 1-4 cents per foot.

It is the plan to have a square of the curb made at a time. The borough to give the entire grade for their square and pavements and the curb over the entire area established would all have to come to their line.

Before many years the entire town would have a uniform curb of concrete and in addition to eliminating the construction of concrete pavements this would also facilitate the flushing of the grain and do away with all the discussion of curb contractors. Only between the rails for the past two years All pavements would be made to conform to the curb line and would therefore have to conform to the uniform grade. Residents in some places will present queer sights after the curb is built and before new pavements are laid but the test result, it is believed, will justify the course of the Council in the matter.

In addition to the action on the curb matter the Council also adopted the suggestion of the committee that the entire town should be twelve foot pavements on 66 foot streets and ten foot pavements on 50 foot streets. They are now 11 and 9 foot respectively. Council agreed that this will make better pavements and in addition give room and space for sidewalks.

OTHER BUSINESS

The Board of Health asked for $60.00 of the appropriation granted at the beginning of the year. The request was granted.

The treasurer reported a balance in the general fund of $1,035.41 and in the special fund of $2605.66. He also reported outstanding notes against the general fund amounting to $600 and one against the special fund of $1000.

On motion of Mr. Rice seconded by Mr. Tawney it was decided to notify the Reading Railroad to fill up approach to their tracks on South side of West Middle street and also North to the crossing.

Andrew Weikert appeared before Council and asked again for a suitable inlet to the properties on the North side of the Western Maryland tracks at the East end of town. On motion of Mr. Rice seconded by Mr. Tawney it

GLOBE TROTTER A TOWN VISITOR

Mihalko, who has Walked Thirty Seven Thousand Miles, Pays Gettysburg a Visit. Has Had Many Thrilling Experiences.

After walking around the world, through Europe, Asia, Africa and America, a total of 37,000 miles, in over 37,000 miles, Joe Mihalko, the famous world's walker, who left his home in Grotia, Austria, on February 22, 1908, has now completed his hike across this country to the Golden Gate and reaching it 19,000 more miles to his great record, and arrived in Gettysburg on a two-weeks' visit during its weeks stand of the schedule allotted him.

Under one of the conditions of his contract, his only means of providing for his traveling expenses is from the donations he may receive from sovereign post cards that he distributes to the big crowds that surround him on his strange journey to fame.

Mihalko is a newspaper correspondent, and a writer for a magazine to which his own publication he sends, writin the story of his travels in book form, and will the news throughout the world. He has a book, and is showing pictures on the way. He is with him a large portfolio, in which he autographs letters and expressions of the governors or some prominent men of the country, and The Dying, with those of President William H. Taft and Vice President James S. Sherman.

The famous walker is in good shape, and looks remarkably well, despite his trip from 126 pounds to 190 pounds. His feet, which are his pride, he shows on the trip. When he started he wore a No. 8, and now he wears a No. 9. He presents a picturesque appearance, dressed in a suit of black rubber boots, knickerbockers, a heavy sweater, and a cap with a visor, and his models presented him by various soldiers, and he carries a heavy cane, a shoulder belt, and a big cane. He carries a pack on his back and lumber bag at his side. He carries a tent, his bedding, cards and other needed articles, the accumulation of his travels, and enough provisions to last him for a day. He started without a single cent of money, and has gathered the few necessary articles by the funds received from the public.

The trip across the west is the worst try has proven most interesting to him, and everywhere he has been warmly received by the officials. He suffered several thrilling adventures on the trip, encountering storms, bad roads and wild animals.

Mihalko is a healthy two years of age, and is unmarried. He has been an athlete all his life, and has been a runner for the past dozen or more years, and has been a member of several athletic clubs and running. He started on his walk around the world February 22, 1908, and was allowed five years in which to complete the trip of 19,000 miles necessary to complete the journey, changed by the publishing house until the time was limited to four years, and has been greatly increased to enable him to receive some additional money for the criticisms of prominent spots in the countries he visits.

Experiences of a thrilling nature have been many and he has fought many pedestrians, and he has had several narrow escapes from death, once by being struck by a train, and by wagons, one snake, and on another occasion he was chased by a bear, which he killed in a severe beating. On one occasion, after walking through the snow for days, for nine days on barren frost in the Rocky Mountains, he suffered severe pain from one continent to another he is obliged to work for his passage as a deck hand.

WOULD POISON ENTIRE FAMILY

Germantown Reports Attempted Murder of Entire Family when Poison Similar to Paris Green is Found in Well.

Germantown has furnished Adams County's latest sensation in the shape of an alleged attempt to wipe out an entire family through a quantity of Paris green or some similar substance in the quercair of Daniel Leatherp. The discovery of the poison was made last week but news of it is only now becoming generally known.

The family get their entire supply of drinking water from the receptacle in which the poison was found.

The reservoir is situated in an orchard at the rear of the barn and west of Mr. Leatherp's home was placed there when he saw that the board covering was pushed out of place and he peered down and saw a small box in the water and later called his father's attention to the matter.

When the box was taken out it was found to be full of stuffs similar to Paris green and the conclusion was drawn that some person was attempting to poison the family.

Some people are of the opinion that the box was placed there by one of the children when they were playing in that vicinity.

The matter was drawn out and the citizens given a thorough cleaning.

SURPRISE PARTY

A very enjoyable surprise party was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Harbaugh, of near Bathsheba Church, Tuesday evening, the occasion bearing a glass in the window of the latter's birthday anniversary. The evening the host. Mr. Klein passed the hours in playing games, after which a bountiful supper was served. The many present had been invited by telephone and was greatly torn up.

At the Riddle and Crouse butcher shop the commotion's were also heard, the sound of crashing glass arousing the proprietors from their sleep. Mr. Riddle and Sentinel building nearby. Mr. Crouse lives in the rear of the shop and could see nothing of the men. Entrance was effected by the men who had taken from the cash register between seven and eight dollars. The entrance was gained through a rear door, the lock being broken and easy access to the lock being had in this way.

At Witmore a store a piece of glass in the front door was broken out whether or not the men were frightened away or had secured enough is not known. They did not succeed in getting into the store. BURGLARS AT FOUR STORES

Four Gettysburg Stores Visited by Burglars during Early Morning Hours. Less than Five Dollars in Cash Secured.

Three Gettysburg stores were entered at an early hour Friday morn ng by unknown parties and small sums of money, aggregating less than five dollars were taken. The stores thus entered were those of Edward H.Culp, Bowser street; B. E. Rice, Carlisle street; and Bieichle and Crouse, Baltimore street. An effort was made to gain entrance to the J. S. Wirmore and Annie Square but it was not successful.

At the Culp store a bar was used to pry open the double doors on Liberty street. The burglary at this place was evidently the first at the work was done under the glare of the electric light on the Liberty street forts. The bar was used first at the top of the door and then gradually worked down to the lock which was pried off and entrance gained. Several barrels in front of the double doors were pushed away and the burglar or burglars made their way into the place. When the store was opened in the morning the disturbance could be seen. The cash drawer was found lying all around and several dollars in pennies found to be missing.

Mrs. Rachael Grotemik, who lives on the second floor of the building, heard the noise made by the men, but since but could see nothing of them. Several cans of peas and salmon, a few packages of candy and some 15 cash constituted the haul at the Rice store. Entrance was gained by breaking a glass in the window of the rear door and unlocking the door by opening the lock. Mr. Rice found things in disorder when he arrived at the store in the morning. The money drawer had been left untouched.

At the Bieichle and Crouse butcher shop the commotion's were also heard, the sound of crashing glass arousing the proprietors from their sleep. Mr. Riddle and Sentinel building nearby. Mr. Crouse lives in the rear of the shop and could see nothing of the men. Entrance was effected by the men who had taken from the cash register between seven and eight dollars. The entrance was gained through a rear door, the lock being broken and easy access to the lock being had in this way.

It would appear that the men had designed to enact through the opening made by the glass but the door would not be worked without the key.

LEE ESCAPES HIS PURSUERS

Man who Jumped from Adams County Jail Well in June is Seen between Hagerstown and Waynesboro but Escapes.

Lee, who jumped from the Adams County jail well on the morning of June 24, was seen between Waynesboro and Hagerstown on Thursday and given chase by Sheriff Thomas Barlow and several deputies from Washington county, Maryland, but got away made good his escape. Lee was working out only for the purpose from the local jail but for pursuing his usual vocation of chicken stealing.

He is driving along the Middleburg pike with a woman by the name of Hazel Gaugler of Waynesboro, when the Sheriff and his deputies appeared. The woman was arrested but Lee jumped from the wagon and raced across the fields in the direction of Leitersburg. Pursuit was deemed useless.

Lee is alleged to have sold the stolen chickens in Hagerstown and a cop was sent to that town when the Sheriff searched the vehicle. Lee was also charged with stealing the horse he made his escape from Sheriff Fleagle and his deputies on the morning of June 24.

The escape was the boldest and most daring ever attempted from the local prison. Sheriff Fleagle and his deputies were in the jail yard when some were pitching horse shoes and others playing base ball. Lee was also doing either and while the others were engrossed in the game he quietly slipped into the corridor and put on his coat and hat.

He then went out and without being noticed ascended the stairs at the west corner of the jail yard out of sight of the guards and made his escape. It is believed that when he found he was not being watched he secured the key to the padlock that was on a portion of the jail, that he then put down to the well fronting on High street and that after unlocking it he here walked over to the West wall and by the assistance of a ladder that was there, which the prisoners have been allowed to use for purposes of repairing the wall, he climbed over the wall and dropped into the corridor and put on his coat and hat.

He has been through Mrs. Wilds's yard and jumped over a fence into the Lutheran cemetery where he left "Wall Street" or "Gallows Avenue." He ran down the alley to the foot of the hill near the southeast corner of the graveyard where he took to the fields in the direction of Culp's Hill and made good his escape.

News of Lee's being in the vicinity of Waynesboro was received by the Sheriff's department on Thursday and they have since been awaiting an opportunity to get him.

THE LITTLE HOMESTEAD

With the coming of "The Little Homestead" to the Majestic Theatre on Tuesday, October 11, theatre goers are promised a treat. The play presents a happy little home in a New England village and the characters are the simple, fer revenge upon the young husband. It tells of a blind 1 alienation which finally ends in the true spirit of love. Besides the scenes and romance connected with the simple story there is a thought too late to atone fully for the wrong, points to a moral which the play and company are among the best that have visited Gettysburg. The cast of "The Little Homestead" is W. S. Patton, Miss Ruth Ramsey will head in this production.

BEST FOR THE MONEY

Vogel's automobile at Weikert's Theatre Tuesday evening was the best for the money Gettysburg theatre goers may expect for some time. It was entertaining, and better home. The stage setting for the scenes was the interior of a garage and the songs were fair and well sung. While the story was not particularly interesting, the fun movie is assured to please.

THE DEACON'S SHEEPSKIN

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1924, by Associated Literary Press.

"If you know anything at all about farm life you know that land without a fence goes a heap sight further than land with a fence," the deacon remarked to me. "I'm careful. A cow is a profitable thing to own. Pork and beef are easily purchased by its peddlers, and they are generally handled over more carefully beforehand. If I'm anywhere there seems to be the pail in my hand. Once, Deacon Strong lived on a farm in the outskirts of the village of Centerville. The problem had found him a practical man. When the deacon warranted a shingle tree free from rot it was as no-peddling time for him at all. In the city northeast morning when a peddler called with meat and a girl rolled up to trade for its gaze. While he didn't exactly scorn the city he didn't acknowledge to any fondness for it, and he was not long there before he realized that he could have gone back to it and talked about graft and all that and retired a rich, but he didn't. He returned to the neighborhood after several weeks, but he didn't call on the deacon. Neither did he make any to arrive about him. He just seemed weed and listened to what people were talking about, and when they were talking about just that one thing, the fact that the deacon had decided to send his old mother to the poorhouse.

Deacon Strong realized that he would be criticized, and he was right about telling what a beautiful poor house it was.

The tin peddler got his call, and the deacon told him he was doing some thinking as he left a store. He was going to have to find a brother in a town twenty miles away, and he was going to see a lawyer.

The day he left been set for grandma to go to the poorhouse when one of the neighbors dropped in to see grandma to show the deacon an advertisement. It ended for information to address one Anna Strong, widow, and strongly hinted that it would be to her great advantage to step out into the limelight. The poorhouse was a thing of the past and a journey made to see a lawyer, and Strong, Strong and Strong Strong's mother. He could prove it by fifty people. He also regretted that it was all right as he, but did the town's council of Centerville, Wisty, a rich man living in Boston, it counts who would be the first to get her to life will to the extent of $20,000?

The deacon was startled. He had said that he hadn't the least doubt of his countenance and that he would come home to the old lady. He went to bed. He didn't sleep much that night and make as effectively. What was one house or grandma? Nothing in the case. The deacon didn't sleep at all the next day, and when he started for home he was at his wits' end to find the old lady. He found her in a cramped that she had not depended on the receipt of the rents through the year and that she was content to live in the poorest room of the house. She was not at all interested in the law. The scraps from the table were enough and to spare for her. She was new fed on the best, instead of slow starvation, and when she was coaxed to an much stronger. She had hardly expected to see her boss, but now he sat with her and even told her jokes, and she said she would live for twenty years yet. He was also among the neighbors and said that he had heard the matter of the poorhouse was dead. He took a shower, and he couldn't think of taking his new mother there.

Mrs. Strong, widow, could hear very well. She heard her son's voice in spite of all her mean cousins, including Charley of Boston, and she had to herself addressed as "dear mother," but she could make no objection to the plan. Not when the daughter-in-law showed her hair for the second wasted her face and said she was a sight. If there ever was one. Not when the old woman tried to eat and found that she could suppose her gratitude in words. Not when the lawyer came and somehow her dentist was in his office. Not when she had a fire under the old woman to make her walk, but not when she had to go against him. She went right on having the best in the house, and the last thing any other old woman didn't lose her mind.

Once a month for two long years Deacon Strong drove to see the old lady the lawyer. He offered all sorts of plans and suggestions, but she was not one. He wrote to Boston, but his letter was unanswered. He consulted other lawyers, but they said that nothing could be done until the old woman died. Saw ours and said, plus cake and puddings and fruit and jellies and all, but the old woman remained obstinate. She said she was willing to live and die in the poorhouse, and that wasn't enough to bring home the Strong' before. Then the old woman died. She went to sleep in her chair one day and passed away without a struggle. She was buried by a relief. Her son was one of the pallbearers, and he was the only one who shed a tear.

"Deacon, you're better off," said the lawyer as they left the cemetery.

"I am glad to hear it. I have just received a letter from Boston," replied the deacon. "It is from Mr. Wisty, and he says he has been a victim of circumstances, and he has come to the old man's bosom."

GETTYSBURG'S POST OFFICE BUILDING PLAN

POST OFFICE BUILDING PLAN

Handsome Structure of Three Stories to House Gettysburg Post Office, Park Commission and Internal Revenue Offices.

Hon. J. Kace Taylor, the Superintending Architect of the Treasury Department has sent Postmaster Bosser the preliminary plans for the new post office building to be erected in Gettysburg.

This building will be erected on Baltimore street on the site which has been purchased from out of the appropriation of $70,000 which Congressman Lafean secured during the sixty Congress. On March 15, 1909 Rogers Tomlinson introduced a bill providing for an appropriation for the erection of the building. This bill was embodied in the omnibus Public Buildings and Grounds bill which became a law during the latter part of the last session of Congress.

The law authorizes the Secretary of Treasury to contract for the erection and completion of a suitable building including fireproof vaults, heating apparatus, elevators and approaches, the purchase complete, for the use of the United States Internal Revenue" and "National Military Park Commission of Gettysburg, Pa., cost not exceeding $100,000.

It is the object of the Treasury Department to have the building completed by the time of the holding of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg.

The law also provided the site to the government have been notified that the appropriation will be available for use week on April 1, 1911, and Mr. Stobie's home and a part of Mr. Mullenberg's home have already been removed.

The building according to the preliminary plans will be built of hardened pool office building in this section of the state.

Invoked Aid of Charity to Lessen Sting of Disapproval.

Mrs. George Nicholas, the town ritual, was the hostess at a party given by the Second Class Sisters of the Reformed Church at her home, and at a time when there were a number of her sorrows with this writer.

Now, I had better have the a friend of mine in Philadelphia, Mr. Friend, who is a wealthy man. I am in the room of her country house, and the Mrs. Nicholas was one of the guests of the Spanish dance, performed by six young ladies of the church.

"At the entertainment's end my friend Mrs. Nicholas came to me with little old woman from one of the back pews.

"And how did you like our Spanish dance?" she asked.

The old woman looked at me sadly. "I was disappointed," she said finally in a soothing voice one replied. "I had hoped to see some new dances, and, besides, the dress of the ladies was not new."

One as Feline.

Mayor Bonne of Chicago said at a luncheon during a lawyer's story:

"Speaking of lawyers, I well know famous character of the Chicago of lawyer. He got on somehow, and he was always called a cat was a case. But he never had an office. He had a desk in the back room of the leading house of the Chicago bar.

"One day a client came to him in the Chicago of those days, and one needs to be told, was in a bad way. Things were seemingly filthy. Judge Bonne, the client's lawyer, was out.

"'Good morning, Tabby,' said the client to the cat, which was sitting on the desk. 'The lawyer's away? purred the cat.

"'Well, then, tell him—'

SUMMER PRUNING.

The writer now and then receives letters from those who have a tree with fruit trees which put out a very large growth of wood, but very little fruit buds. They also say that they have been pruning freely this year, but that the growth is as great as ever. Undoubtedly the trouble is that the tree gets too rich a soil or too much fertilizer and cultivation. For such trees summer pruning is recommended. This is the time of the year when the sap is in the most active growth and when the wood is soft and easily cut. The pruning should be done in the growing season as it is, the wounds heal over quickly and the tree receives a severe check to its growth. Instead of being stimulated to the formation of wood growth and leaves, it tends in the direction of fruit buds. The wounds should be small. The pruning tool will depend upon the size of the limbs to be removed. A pruning saw is best for large limbs, and a pair of shears when the limbs are small. The farmer's pruning knife is also useful.

Lanier of the Cavalry

Or, A Week's Arrest

By GENERAL CHARLES KING,

Author of "The Colonel's Daughter," "Foes in Ambush," Etc.

Copyright, 1910, by A. E. Lindemuth Company

[SYNOPSIS.]

Gilfrey, Mr. Thomas Thornhill is put out by what he considers the "cheek" of a cad lord of creation whose horse his driver used to, and then struck down. Thornhill's son, Lieut. Arthur Thornhill, and his chief driver, had to follow two miles to Fleet's ranch close to town, where he might have taken a slip or two more. It was his first offense and Foster forgave it. It should be remembered, however, that Mr. C declared that it was not he with whom the driver left the ranch, but two "fellers"—I. e., troopers—who happened to be near the store.

There were sorrow and estrangement at Sumner's. Never before, as Mrs. Sumner declared, had Barbara ever had a secret from her mother. Moreover, Marian Lee's visit was affected indirectly the same way. She shrank from all mention of that unfortunate affair of Friday night.

Wednesday morning, when Sergeant Flynn returned to the post and reported to Lieutenant Lanier for orders, he was told to report at Sumner's at 10 o'clock and be at the office at 8 o'clock and, further, that next week he would be likely to be there at the same hour.

A spell of stormy rain had followed the blizzard. The young people of the garrison were now in force at every rejoicing in the snow sports. The ravine had made some famous slides on the bluffs, and the children along the river front were busy having high and sock about the drifts and tussels at the northward end of the parade.

Captain Sumner had been sent for and soon admitted to a long interview with the colonel at his quarters and came away with a grave and troubled face to a ten minutes' conference with his guests who had left the newly wedded and distressed.

"Ian Kent," he said as once more he set forth into the night. "I've got to see you and Lanier at once. Can't say anything before that, or else my wife will be down on me. Better hustle a note across with Miss Barbara."

It was just about a quarter of 8. The lights at the office were still burning, for the colonel had intimated that he might be back. Barbara was sitting over his desk and wondering why the colonel should be closeted with Mr. Saville, Crane, Sergeant Flynny and awaiting for Cassidy and Quinlivan, who was a queer "outfit" of Saville's at best. It seemed odd that the colonel summoned all "fortinbet" in barracks should be a sergeant in the troop consulted in the nearest thing in an Irishman among the regulars.

Barbara was busy with other reflections when the colonel came unexpectedly. The adjutant rose, but at a signal from him was not excused.

Full fifteen minutes the colonel was striding up and down the long room the most. Twice he muttered something to himself. Then he halted at his desk against an unseemly long time to do a simple thing, and at last, as the interpreters were heard, with short shrugs, he said: "Lanier, I've got to ask you to do a very disagreeable thing, but with great confidence that you—and Miss Barbara—will not blink. Here's a warrant for the arrest of Trooper Burton, assigned to your troop. Take a sergeant and a file of men and bring him to the guard house."

"Burton, sir, now here you known Mr. Lanier?"

"Were they be joined, sir."

"And you know him in his cadet days?"

"Yes, sir."

"And you told me you never heard of his writing in newspapers?"

"Never did," answered Barbara. "I believe it impossible for him to have had anything to do with those dreadful, mercenary articles about the cavalry."

"You consider him above any suspicion above a lie—or a trick of any kind?" Barbara faltered just one instant. What did the colonel mean by a trick? Had he—had Barbara—been a party to a trick? Trixie had been played, and one only this last summer during the encampment—a trick, too, that if truth were told Lanier himself knew had failed. At least it had been played for his benefit and had "rattled the cage" of the colonel's eyes.

"I consider him as square a man as I know and utterly above a lie of any kind," was the last answer.

"And yet you hesitate. You know we have heard rumors of late, Miss Barbara?" she bowed assent, inquiringly.

"I have heard rumors and slanders, Colonel Sutton," was Barbara's proudly defiant reply.

"Well, then," said Sutton impressively—"here are you and Sumner and Saunter, three of the 'old fixers,' as you are called by your respective grades, and I see plainly enough you three are terribly confoundedly afflicted to reward Lanier. Now, I've had enough of this. There is another matter I've gotten a commander to show his hand in his subordinates, but I am determined in this regiment—oh, cease it, Major Saunter—as well as now!" [illegible] "I suppose you think nothing blinded to mistrust his best friend, but you're wrong, and, confidentially, even less now than before. Go, get, and tell the doctor, 'the sit will be upon him,' and then you may come back and report to me. Lanier, you will go with the sergeant and bring Burton to the guard house. Then you will report to me, and hastily, even less now than before, for, you see, I'm in a hurry myself. Now, then, Miss Barbara, I'm sorry to have kept you waiting, but you can rest assured that all will be right. Good night."

"Colonel Sutton," answered Barbara with her head high, but with a trembling hand on his sleeve, "I am troubled beyond measure at your words. Believe me, I am not conscious of any deception. I am sure you can rely on Mr. Lanier as you can on me. I am sure you will see that he is not ashamed to tell you all. Lanier, you must answer the colonel's questions. Tell him all. Tell him the truth, even though it involve those of his mother and that—that—Mr. Lawless. Tell him everything for the honor of the regiment. Mr. Lawless has never spoken to me but once, and he appealed to her mother since not only refused to speak to him, but actually turned me for simply asking for what was my own."

"Very good, gentlemen," answered Sutton, when the anxious girl was gone. It is quite evident in my opinion Mr. Lanier is a perverted hero and not at all an abandoned sinner, but just as sure as I can work this out I shall have to hold before a general court martial."

The men were mostly in bed, as they should be at such an hour. Those who had been on informal duty, and many of the sergeants, were still at the mess room. Beyond this brightly lighted building and the line of barracks the infantry barracks at the westward end were the shops and the creek valley, almost as sunny of the officers' children had been accustomed to play in evening and there now—nearly 11 o'clock—but a few scattered groups of both sexes, wives and daughters of officers and sergeants, were to be seen. Lights were burning in many of the barracks from the garrison, were having a merry time of it in the mess room, Brilliance. The night air, frosty and clear, was filled with the sounds of the love of the guard, merely cautioning the sentinels that the officer of the day should not gone on his way with the prisoner. Lanier knew that the colonel presently other officers appeared at the door of the Post Hotel, immediately on the other side of the Post, immediately on the other side of the Post, immediately on the other side of the Post

KING MANUEL AT GIBRALTAR

Royal Family Made Voyage on Yacht.

LOYAL TROOPS ABOUT LISBON

Attempt Fares Your Allegiance to New Republic May Cause a Civil War—The Capital in Quiet.

Gibraltar, Oct. 7.—The Portuguese royal yacht Amelia entered this harbor. King Manuel and the queen dowager, Maria Pia, the queen mother, and the Duke of Oporto are all aboard the yacht, all well.

Lisbon, Oct. 7.—While the city of Lisbon is in the hands of the revolutionaries and a republic has been proclaimed, with Theophile Braga as provisional president, the royalist sentiment Republicans constituting the majority, there are still many thousands in and around the capital who are loyal to the monarchy.

The monarchists have behind a portion of the Lisbon troops and troops massed in entrenched camps about the city. Thus far these have refused to ally themselves with the revolutionists, and the provisional government is taking steps to enforce allegiance.

The people of Lisbon are ignorant of events in the provinces and therefore it is not known whether the movement is broad enough to sweep the country. Nevertheless, the Republican forces are proceeding to finish the transformation of the monarchy into a republic as was so accomplished fact, to stand for all time.

Royalist Lang Phrased.

For months past preparations have been going on for the overthrow of the king and it had been definitely arranged to take the capital on Sunday or Wednesday. It so happened that the king was found to take up residence at Cascais, and the warships were ordered to proceed to that point in the bay, which is the chief support of the monarchists, thereupon the revolt began to act immediately; otherwise that detective arm of the government would be able to offer no assistance in carrying out the plan.

Monday night at midnight the Republican chiefs, accompanied by the nervous partisans, went to the barracks of the Sixteenth regiment of infantry. The doors were immediately thrown open to the populace, and the men were displaced to thousands. The barracks of the First regiment of artillery were next visited, and the guns dragged forth. The revolutionists marched to the highest point in Lisbon, a fine strategical position, where another gun was mounted threatening the town.

Loyal Troops Rally.

The government troops here-distinctly took up a position in the center of the town, about two miles distant from the revolutionists, and the royal Municipal Guards were placed to oppose the revolutionists.

Meanwhile the insurgent cruiser Admantor Gonsalves set out from Lisbon, ready for a bombardment, while the cruiser Rainel proceeded down the river, taking her station opposite the seaside barracks. In the event of which having joined the revolt, was surrounded by a force of loyal troops.

The commanding commenced, and the whole town trembled to its foundations. A regiment of cavalry and infantry marched to the support of the royalists. The artillery began firing against the revolutionists, and was answered with a terrible fire from the artillery. This regiment was almost entirely destroyed, only three men escaping.

The revolutionists gained another military courage and maintained an attack on all sides by superior forces for two days and nights. On Tuesday the Admantor sailed for Mozambique, Benin palace, and King Manuel and the Queen Mother Amelia were obliged to escape to Cascais, from which place they went to Mafra.

Monarchists Surrender.

The same night the Admantor and Rainel shelled the center of the town, during which movement the loyal artillerists forces, and finally the latter, tired of the carnage, surrendered. The republic was proclaimed in the afternoon and the Republican flag hoisted on the public edifices.

The provisional government has issued a communication to the foreign powers, notifying them of the proclamation of the Portuguese Republic. No serious obstructions are expected to be offered by the provinces to the new regime. The government has already appointed civil governors for the different provinces.

The Brazilian president-elect, Marshal Hermes Fonseca, has assured through the streets Thursday with the provisional president. Both were cheered vociferously greeted by the people. Order has been restored throughout the greater part of the city. Patrols are guarding the thoroughfares.

AIDED MANUEL'S DOWNFALL

Subjects Didn't Like His Relations With Former Dancer.

Paris, Oct. 7.—The downfall of King Manuel, of Portugal, is the leading subject of discussion in the cafes and on the boulevards, because of his notorious relations with Miss Gaby Deslys, a noted French dancer, now performing in Vienna.

The young king is said to have lavished money and jewels upon Miss Deslys, with real kingly prodigality. His attentions in this stage favorite, according to accounts, were looked on with more disapproval by provincial subjects and helped, it is believed, to strengthen the feeling against the monarchy in the country.

The first out the king while she was dancing in a London musical piece, Miss Manuel was there searching for a home. Her get one of the most desirable description, and attracted the eye of Portugal's youthful sovereign.

According to report Miss Deslys says she owes her elegance to being the favorite of a king; that it was a very short time before Portugal will be overcome. She declares that she never has received any other relations with the king, although she admit there have been a good financial success in her theatrical ventures. She says she even intends to return to call on the uncrowned queen of Portugal. She came to Paris to visit her.

29 Sailors Drowned.

Cayenne Rodgers, of the battleship New Hampshire, leaves the hammocks of sailors who perished Saturday by the swamping of a barge in the North river, New York, at twenty-nine minutes where are missing, but it is supposed that they merely overturned in the excitement.

On board the New Hampshire when the accident occurred the clothes were secured, including that on the men who had been saved.

The high water is supposed to have been responsible for the accident. The barge was being towed from the left the One Hundred and Fifty-sixth street dock for the New Hampshire.

They were the first of a detail of 325 sailors whose lives are spared. The men boarded the battleship's boat, which was towed by a launch launch. After the launch, with the barge in tow, had left the dock caught by the strong wind, and, battered by the flood tide, was running up stream at a five-mile an hour clip.

The barge was covered with white caps, and the short tow line added to the difficulties of the launch.

In their anxiety to get aboard the New Hampshire the sailors crowded forward in the bow of the barge. The weight of the men in the bow caused the barge to dip, and the water rushed into the boat. It was dark, and in the confusion many of the cars lost their lives.

RESIGNS AS PROVOST OF PENN

C. G. Harwood to Quit the University.

FRIENDS NOT SURPRISED

Arduous Duties and Considerations of Health Assigned as Reasons—Considered Resigning For Three Years.

Provost Charles Custis Harwood, for the last three years, has resigned, been the active head of the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, and it was announced Monday that he has resigned, to take effect at a meeting of the trust-ees, which will be held next month.

The resignation, which the provost desires to take effect not later than Dec. 31, 1910, was not accepted and was referred for consideration to the executive committee of trustees because of the importance of the office to the university.

Provost Harwood who attended the meeting, and also all the other trustees who were present when the letter was read, were not unprepared for the news that the university was face to face with a serious question. In the letter Provost Harwood set forth that the provost received letters from Mr. Harriman informing them in advance with the decision that had been reached by him.

The decision to resign his academic duties had been made known to a few of the provost for some three years past, but the trustees had never been conversant with the reasons which prompted the step.

Considerations of health and family affairs, as well as the large amount of detail work connected with the office, have been the chief reasons for the step taken by the provost. The letter which was read to the trustees among the trustees, and acquainted them with the reasons which led the standing committee on the state of the university to accept the resignation, to make a final disposition of the professorship vacancy.

It is believed that the trustees will make some very strong efforts to prevent's duties, particularly those relating to the finances of the university, with the end that Mr. Harriman's position as chairman of the finance committee may be retained by the university, which undertaking his financial and organizatic attribu.

Mingled with the news of Provost Harriman's resignation came the announcement of the appointment of Dr. J. William White, John Rhea Barton professor of surgery, to be acting head of the trustees at the meeting.

Delaware Gain Seven Votes.

The state of Delaware, next to Rhode Island, the smallest commonwealth in the Union, presented a silent service on its election returns. It bears her name, one of the largest Democratic states in the Union.

The shining silver service, said to be the largest piece of silver ever made and valued at $10,000, was presented to the battleship Delaware in 1814, and was sent, acting in behalf of the state. Captain Stephen Decatur, then of the U. S. navy, made the address of acceptance.

Persons of prominence from all parts of the United States and from the commonwealth and their wives were present at the launching of the battleship Delaware. Governor Preus, of Delaware there, laden with gifts for the battleship which were received with appreciation.

The flagbearer, which is flying in the Delaware river, near Wilmington, received the honor of launching.

After Captain Gove's speech of acceptance the christening party left for the Delaware branch of the Dupont powder mill, where a luncheon was given to the ship by Mrs. Coreliss Moore Cochran.

A portrait of Commodore Jacob Jones, who commanded the Wasp in the war of 1812, and who captured the Frolic and the Wasp, during the famous fight with the Frolic in 1814, was presented by Mrs. John H. Wilson, great granddaughter of Commodore Jones, to the battleship.

The portrait, painted through Alexander Dupont, presented a portrait of Admiral Jones, who commanded the Wasp, when served with distinction during the war of 1812.

Miss Dorothy Gray, the youngest girl living in New York, arranged for the launching of the battleship. The old country, who will be the battleship's first brother ship has brought to the United States in six years.

PETERFEST FRUIT FOUND

Latest Discovery Near South Mountain in the Find of Large Numbers of Specimens of Fruits and Other Articles.

While excavating for sand on his farm near South Mountain, George H. Rank, one of the large fruit growers in that section, made some unusual finds.

Mr. Rank at a depth of 70 feet began to unearth many varieties of tropical fruits that were petrified and had been buried in an avalanche that took place in the Blue Ridge section thousands of years ago.

Mr. Rank says he found lemons in a petrified state—dozens of them—still ripe, each showing the shape of a lemon and the rough skin characteristic from one end, while the other showed the indentures where the fruit was separated from the twig from which it had been suspended.

There were also cocoanuts and orange, which were as fine in shape as the natural state that the pores and even the seed and one of the oranges that had been broken open with a hammer, had turned to stone. Then, there were other specimens of nuts—some of which were the size of mangoes, and some contained a number of kernels of nuts, and the covering between the outer shell that resembled the smaller nuts, was rough and similar to that of the hemlock nut. The finds were shown to Prof. Ulsher, a geologist, of Baltimore, Mr. Rank said, and Prof. Ulsher declared that there was not in existence today any fruit or nuts of the tropical regions like it. There were many varieties of nuts, large, small and small, which were also different from the fruit of the present day.

Another curio shown was a bunch of some large animal, three inches long and an inch-and-a-half in the base. Prof. Ulsher also said that this belonged to some kind of an animal now no longer in existence.

Mr. Rank also found while digging in the sand pit, a petrified toad; a small fish of some kind, resembling a young shad; and the head of a horned toad. The horns stand out quite plainly, and this is considered a find that is mystifying to geologists. It is stated that the horned toad is not now known to exist any further south in this country than the Pennsylvania portion of Maries—but Mr. Rank is in possession of the head of one that he says must have existed in this region at one time.

Near the curios brought to the surface from the bottom of the pit, Mr. Rank found a petrified tree, the bark of which unscrewed even fast to laugh. It is to-tapped of a petrified tree, very similar to a clock composition. Mr. Rank stated the tree had evidently been split in two, and gave portions of it to exhibit. It is a fine piece of work, and has become so found.

The farm on which Mr. Rank resides seems to have been a favorite hunting ground for the many tribes of Indians that used to roam the hills there. It is in possession of many Indian relics which include axes, tomahawks, flint and spear-heads, and an Indian tool which was used by the Red Men for making and shaping from stone their darts and spear-heads. He also has an old gun which was probably used by Indians for the shooting of the wild animals they killed while prowling around those one place to the other. The tool is made from flint rock. He also has an Indian mortar, and pestle, upon which the warriors used in dealing the death blow to animals they had captured.

The most interesting relic in the collection used by the Red Men of the Potomi stones Mr. Rank has on exhibition. These were used by the Indians help and bleed and prayed over.

All the specimens of petrified fruits and Indian relics which Mr. Rank has are in a high state of preservation. He has had many fine offers from curios of museums for specimens of his collection but he has refused to part with his finest of curios.

HEARD A BELLED BUZZARD

Where an ecclesiastical outlook so far-fear Hagerstown Girl Hit, Is Told by Mountain.

Mountain, declares that he heard the long tolling of bells yesterday, but no doubt that many people have had as in his eminence heard them.

Mr. Fitz was going to the railroad station early one morning when he heard the tolling of bells. He had a lookout all about him, and so did a man on the road, who fancied his dog was following him, but there was nothing on the earth that could give forth such a sound, and then they looked above them.

There they saw, a thousand feet away from them, a flock of buzzards, and by some listening they determined the identity of the bell that came from them. They could not pick out the individual bird, but they are satisfied it was a belled buzzard.

BOOGHERTY HEADS STATE NATIONAL GUARD

Daugherty Advanced to Rank of Major General when Governor Retires. Other Advances of Men and Known in Gettysburg.

Major General Wendell P. Bowman, of Philadelphia, commander of the 1st division of the Pennsylvania National Guard since March 25, 1908, was placed on the retired list at his own request and Brigadier General Charles Bowman Daugherty, of Wilkes Barre, commander of the 2nd brigade, was promoted to succeed him in command of the division.

These orders were issued from National Guard headquarters on Friday and is officially making the announcements that Brigadier General Charles Bowman Daugherty, of Wilkes Barre, has been attached to the headquarters of the commander-in-chief since March 20, has been assigned to command the 1st division, and Governor Tener has made that Major and Quartermaster General of the National Guard, has been promoted to lieutenant colonel and quartermaster in the quartermaster's department and is assigned to headquarters of the division.

The present commander of the division lives at Wilkes Barre and has been in the military service for 30 years. He served in the Ninth Regiment, which he commanded for 10 years. He began his training through all grades and serving as a private in Company A during the Spanish War. He became a brigadier general in April, 1911, and a major general of General J. P. S. Gobin and is well known here.

Colonel Vandling has been in the Guard since 1877, when he entered the Eighth Regiment. He has commanded all grades in the Twelfth and commanded the Twelfth Regiment. He was elected colonel August 17, 1900 and resigned.

Nof reasons are assigned for General Bowman's retirement, but when he was appointed by Governor Tener it could be would serve but a short time and that he has been physically unable to do the commission, to succeed to the command of the division.

Colonel Vandling is a native of Harrisburg. He moved to Scranton when he was young and has been postmaster there. He is interested in water companies and other enterprises.

HOME BURNED AT GARDNERS

Reading Railroad Engine Blamed for Sparks which are Supposed to have Set Fire to Home of Mrs. Sherlen Yeatts.

Fire on Monday afternoon completely destroyed the two story dwelling house of Mrs. Charles Yeatts at Gardners Station together with a large portion of its contents. Sparks from the engine of the passenger train leaving here at four o'clock are supposed to have caused the blaze which was discovered shortly after the train passed.

The fire was first seen by Isaiah Bream. Harvey Bream and W. A. Dinkle—carpenters who were working near the Yeatts property. When it was discovered the flames had gained a hundred jars of fruit, potatoes, meat and other supplies, all of which were destroyed. Mrs. Zion of Gardners who was visiting Mrs. Yeatts, lost a sum of money, a gold watch and some clothes in the fire.

The house was a two story frame structure and burned very rapidly so that it was seen that it could not be saved and all efforts were directed to getting out the contents. The building was partly covered by insurance.

GETTYSBURG LOST TO PENN

College Team Goes Down to Defeat before Strong University Team by Score of 29 to 0. Friends Criticize Style of Play.

The Gettysburg College fast ball team broke down in an inglorious defeat before the University of Pennsylvania on Saturday afternoon by the score of 29 to 0.

As has been the case in the past three years the visitors were too much completely outplayed and outclassed by their opponents in the game and is addition showed poor headwork in the field. The injuries of Captain Bell and Bowers also crippled the team by losing their stronger opponents much more frequent opportunity to advance the ball.

Only once during the game did Gettysburg succeed in getting to first, there were only a few times during the entire game when the team were within striking distance of the goal. The forward line was powerless to gain consistently through the heavy line of the visitors and on the fast down almost every time the ball was given to Gettysburg the method of play has always been criticised by the friends of the game and with Penn who contend that at least two downs should be made before resorting to punt as the time would be used and there would be some chance of advancing the ball.

On every exchange of punts Saturday Penn gained from 10 to 20 yards and sometimes more. This was done in a manner that showed that the team was hurried in his kicks through the fast charging of the entire line of Penn. As a result Penn would get the ball and after making a few rushes would punt. Gettysburg would return the punt with a set gain to Penn of a slightly fractional part of the length of the field.

Only a few times did Gettysburg hold Penn for downs and the gains were not of the percent sufficient to extend team but put up on Franklin Field for many years.

SIX HURT IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Littlestown the Scene of Disastrous Auto Accident when Machine Takes Double Somersault. Some Severe Injuries.

In an automobile accident near Littlestown on Sunday afternoon when a Waynesboro resident were seriously hurt and the machine demolished. They are turned two somersaults before it became stationary and three of the occupants were thrown from the machine while the others were all thrown to the road. Loss of control of the car is blamed for the accident.

The injured are:

R. W. C. Evans, of the Geiser Manufacturing Company, severe injuries to the back. Mr. Evans' injuries are considered the most severe.

Mrs. R. W. C. Evans Colles' bone broken.

H. F. Sollenberger, cashier of the Bank of Waynesboro. Rendered unconscious for an hour and badly bruised.

Mrs. Sollenberger. Severe cuts and bruises.

Orville Sollenberger. Bruises.

Mrs. Evans' small child of her mother. Mrs. Evans. Cut about the head and body and both knocked loose.

The party were returning from York to Waynesboro and while going out the main road from Littlestown to Hanover was evidently looking for a cross road when control of the machine was lost, the machine going into a ditch at the side of the road. In pulling out again the machine turned over twice and when it finally came to rest was the opposite direction from the one in which it had been traveling.

Mr. Evans was caught beneath the car with the Sollenberger boy and the latter was of other getting loose and started to attend to the others.

Aboard the machine with Young, of Hanover, appeared in his machine and he hurried to Littlestown for help.

Dr. Gittier and Dr. Crouse responding. Mr. Evans was the only one of the party not rendered unconscious in the accident. All were taken to the Order Police in Littlestown and their injuries attended to.

A survivor of accident from Waynesboro were summoned and arrived there on the afternoon train to attend their member in Dr. Sollenberger who is helping to attend to the injured.

PAID FOR LOAVES OF STOLEN BREAD

Veterans who Took Twelve Loaves of Bread from McAllister Home at Time of Battle Returns and Insists on Payment.

Miss Agnes McAllister, who lives south of near MacAllister's Mill was not look weeks visited by a veteran here on July 4th encampment, dedicated who insisted on paying for some of the bread which he had stolen at the time of the battle. The bread was baked by Mrs. McAllister which was almost a half century old and the money was duly paid when visited at the meeting of Corporal Tanner Camp No. 2, Department of Pennsylvania, Grand Army of the Republic, assuming by Theodore McAllister.

The veteran, Henry Shaven, was a member of Company 1, sixty fifth Pennsylvania volunteer infantry and while on duty in skirmish line in the vicinity of McAllister's Mill on the third day of the battle stole the bread from an oven at the McAllister home.

Last week when Mr. Swain returned for the dedication he and several companions visited the scene of the battle when that of the stolen bread was told. It was remembered that twelve loaves had been taken and when Mr. Swain left the battlefield that two others of the comrades present had helped some of the stolen bread. Mr. Swain then exhibited the scene of the still and were delighted at the same opportunity to pay for the time of the battle.

Mr. Swain insisted on paying Miss Agnes McAllister when he recognized her relationship to the family who had been stolen. She however refused to accept the money as the bread was wanted and that she was glad to have had a part in the large demand that was paid and the money was finally accepted.

CHILDREN NEED VERY BEST ROADS

Good Highways Prevent Regular Attendance of School.

SPECIAL GATHERINGS A TASK.

National Change Is Urged to Work For Better Highways as a Help to Youngsters and Greater Interest in Rural Life Improvement.

One of the advantages that good roads are to a community that often does not right of in the prevention of children attending school regularly, thereby furthering the ambition of every parent that his or her child shall be well educated, and another is the prevention of social lonesomeness, which is so fully developed when the "grind" is away over well cared for highways.

In an article written for the national groups by Logan Waller Page he says:

"The advantages of good roads extend to every citizen, whether he lives in city or country, and to every section where there is agricultural manufacturing or mining. All are there or less dependent on the rural highways. Perhaps we are unaware of the commercial advantages that will be derived when these highways are improved so as to facilitate transportation are they issues of food thereby. These benefits have been carefully computed and estimated in dollars and cents, and so enormous have they been found conservatively to be that they present a convincing argument in any thinking man of the importance and necessity for road improvement.

"But there are other elements of advantage which more properly represented the improvement of our roads, advantages which deserve the most serious consideration than any financial estimates which can be made. These are the social advantages which are the result of a community standard, but need to be looked for in the economic and the moral and intellectual advancement of the people.

"Most of our cities and towns have good streets and highways, which are the ultimate business and recreation. The people live close together, and social and friendly intercourse is easy. The schools and churches are within easy reach of all. So our urban population has ample facilities for business, for recreation, for social intercourse and for stimulating contact which a rich life.

"It is different, however, with the rare-thinks of our people who are engaged in agricultural pursuits and live away from the centers of business and population. They have not the paved streets and good roads to travel over, and consequently their social opportunities have no roads such as allow and encourage the easy contact of neighboring business, of social intercourse, of regular attendance at church and school. To them will flow the maximum of benefits from improved roads. Improved roads will bring them in closer touch with the world of progress. It will give them stringent ideas and assist them to adopt the new methods which are so necessary for them to have part with the rest of progress along other lines, and to their advance as will our civilization. As they advance as will our entire country and be united.

"Good roads would revolutionize our country districts more than all else the country could do its way to school in winter when the child is often shut with only a few blocks of paved streets to walk. In summer, such a child rather over shoulders and leads him but in bad, muddy roads the attendance of home from half an hour to an hour before school and is apt to be there on time. The roads are wet, and really many days out of the week. The country is open and the good winds are impassable to the attached women has to be tied to the door to the automobile, the doctor to get to his patients, the rural free as an end to the children of the farm to be able to the pleasures of the day, and the expenses and clothing of the family possessing.

"These conditions cause broken and irregular attendance. They create an opposition to the child for the school and a prejudice in the mind of parents against education and endless advancement. They are a constant drain upon the energies and the children out of school for days and weeks at a time, and in many others upon the busy from the economy will do greater harm that the material effects upon the land will be good. We realize that if everyone acted out only if and in a healthy body, and that it would be a misinterpreted economy of material cost to deny her children to school under conditions of exposure which endanger their bodily health.

"Improved roads would be a great factor in reducing the percentage of illiteracy which is the greatest blot on our country. Our present illiteracy cannot be reduced to a reasonable percentage closed by necessitating all of the children, both city and country, into the schools. Many children would be saved, enlisted by a process of compulsory education, and many more there all-around. Improved roads would bring schools to town, and in many communities the new schools would be so much improved as to indicate their early erection. Many children are now working who wisely trained and properly assisted would be a great help to their parents in their efficient administrative in our homes. Many children are now growing up to the schoolhouses and can easily be brought to the schools, to receive their share of the social and moral influences of our future generations.

"Church attendance would also be stimulated by road improvement. Where one has to make a difficult journey over he doesn't mind driving over a few miles more, and the social advantages would thus be augmented.

"The farmer's wife who knows best is said to take a pride in their churches. Churches are more comfortable churches would be built, and both children and adults would be induced to tend church more regularly than they do now with a view to more orderly and uncomfortable churches, for church-going is not the only opportunity for religious atmosphere which permeates the community. Many important and social factors connected with these buildings would be developed by good roads.

"The schools and churches of a community are the centers of social and sentimental forces. Next to these comes the country store, which usually is the place where the people of the rural districts bring the people of the rural districts into social touch with the outside world. It places in their hands the daily papers and magazines and all of the current literature of the country. It is the place to which they naturally go as to what is transpiring in the political, social and business relations of their brothers in the city. The beautiful and healthful influences which make a happiness and home comforts of our country districts are unquestionable, but nothing contributes to its efficiency as regularity more than improved roads."

ROAD DRAINAGE.

Necessity of Requiring Flush Culverts Over Low Places.

Pennsylvania's state highway commissioner has issued the following order on the question of road drainage:

"Where water runs from one side from one side to the other at a road it should be carried under the road through a culvert. Where the water is small a pipe is sufficient to carry the maximum flow. Where the water is large a box or arch is necessary.

"Culverts should be placed at the lowest point in the road. Where the road is level the culvert should be placed at the point where they are need and making necessary the placing of proportionately smaller loads.

"It is the duty of the township in which any attempt is made to carry water across the road to see that the culvert in the road surface it is done by means of a culvert properly constructed in the most primitive manner, which is to say that the water is carried under by structures consisting in part, if not wholly, of logs. This is a very undesirable manner of construction, but a very unavoidable manner, but it is found that in many cases the logs are placed in such a position that they have been built of stone and mortar, and in a far more substantial manner, which has led to a few years to the destruction of the culvert structure. For the smaller culverts and drains in the township roads where a small culvert is desirable four kinds of pipe are recommended, namely, iron, clay, reinforced iron and concrete. The use of any of these for that purpose is to be discouraged, and all existing plank culverts should be removed by some other or material as rapidly as practicable. Culverts should be not less than 12 inches or than four, but unless very carefully constructed are not to be recommended. Except in rare cases the material is not to be recommended. Except in rare cases the material is not to be recommended.

To Show Their Work.

The O. T. Newell company of Hanover, Pa., has been chosen for the decoration by the board of revenue of the Pennsylvania state fair, which opens at Harrisburg the second week in September. Although of Pennsylvania and Somerset counties, the board decided at the annual meeting of the Alabama good roads association, held at Selma, Ala., to be represented that the company is taking the best exhibit in their state fair and that the Good Roads association the road exhibit at the Pennsylvania state fair.

Law and Matrimony

The best off in this world's goods and the best looking widow in the village of Sruzewich was Mrs. Henry Rohrer. She was not only proud of herself, but the town was proud of her. She wouldn't have been a widow more than a year after the death of her husband, but four years had passed and no one had won her love. It was said that Farmer Johnson, Widow Rohrer's nearest neighbor, would be the happiest man in the village. Three months after the death of Rohrer it was heard of Widow Roberts. Then a cousin served a summons on him as defendant in a lawsuit for damages. The widow was the plaintiff.

"She claims that a cow horned over belonging to me damaged her property $20 worth. Never owned a cow horn of cow in my life."

That afternoon he went down to see the widow about it. He was very graciously received and his attorney-at-law was called in to reconsider, and, instead of the last, the widow said:

"Mr. Johnson, I've seen you in church for the last five Sundays—your pew is directly ahead of mine—and you have never looked around once."

"Mother not. I'm too hard to be converted to church."

"Absurd! Mr. Johnson, this suit must be off."

Mr. Johnson was at church next Sunday, but he didn't look around. What time he was not looking at the hymn book he was looking at the widow's profile. He looked at it so much that it was a wonder it didn't wear out. This time it claimed down upon her a blush for carrying the lawyer's gun off its league.

"By smoke, but that woman must get!" he shouted as he read. "I don't even know her name, and I'm in love!"

"Better go and see her," was the advice which the minister gave him.

The widow was smiling and gracious. She declared that the lawsuit was not much interest and answered:

"Mr. Johnson, you've been absent again last Sunday, but you never so good as."

"I—I guess I must have been powerful sleepy," he said, with confusion.

"As to this suit, Mr. Johnson, it must go on."

Mr. Johnson was not at church next Sunday. He went out on the road with his book to a strawstack to do some thinking. He had come to love, and he wondered what was coming to him. He had to do it on the road, for, with Monday afternoon the constable was there with a subpoena.

"Now, what in Aunt Jemmy is to this thing?" he asked himself as he was put into his hands.

"The widow is after me, that's the only explanation left for these, I believe," was the reply.

"Well, I'll be hanged if I won't, and I'll stand a heap better than I do."

But he didn't. Next day when he called he was received coldly by Mary and the widow proceeded to say:

"Mr. Johnson, I've got you to church but Sunday."

"Oh!"

"And consequently you did not see me in church."

"But, widow, there ain't no sense to it. I've given that I never can into your fence."

"Yes?"

"If I had I'd have paid damages right away. I'm not the man to be turned over one's head. I'm not the man to be turned over one's head. I'm not the man to be turned over one's head
